STJB is Ready to Welcome Grandparents this Friday!

A long-standing tradition at STJB is our annual Grandparents Day and Special Friends Day celebration. The event is scheduled for this Friday and will begin with Mass at Church of the Holy Spirit at 8:10 a.m., followed by delightful performances from students in the gymnasium. (Students have been working hard on their performances and they are so excited to show their grandparents!)

The event will conclude with grandparents visiting their students' classroom where they will work on a special activity together. School will dismiss at 11:00 a.m. so students and grandparents can enjoy the afternoon together.

A Letter from Dr. Beck

Dear Parents,

Very Special Greetings,

I have been thinking a lot about all of our beautiful children here at St. John the Baptist and I have observed just how our parents value their dear children. The more children know you value them, that you consider them extraordinary people, the more willing they will be to listen, and afford others the same esteem.

The same is true with teachers...the more appropriate teaching is based upon knowledge of them, the more eager children will be to learn from teachers. And...the more children learn, the more extraordinary they become. As parents and teachers, we should be able to see that all children are wonderful in their own way. We should also see why believing so is vital for successful teaching and learning.

In truth, children are looking for adults who know them, who appreciate what in them is special, who will nurture and help them harness those special qualities. This discovery process takes time and digging. Even in children whose natural wonder lies right on the surface where it is easily seen and enjoyed. And...of course, we all know children whose specialness is somewhat hidden. Yet, these young people have a "wonderfulness" in them waiting to be discovered and nurtured. As their parent and their teacher, we have a responsibility to them and an opportunity for ourselves to find it.
